The time for new approaches to White ' s work is overdue. Central to the present study are Edward Said ' s ideas about the role of the intellectual (and the writer) – of speaking “ truth to power,” and also the importance of tracing the “ affiliations ” of a text and its embeddedness in the world. This approach is not incompatible with Jung ' s theory of the ‘ great ’ artist and his capacity to answer the deep-seated psychic needs of his people. White ' s work has contributed in many different ways to the writing of the nation. The spiritual needs of a young nation such as Australia must also comprehend its continual urge towards self-definition. Explored here is one important aspect of that challenge: white Australia ' s dealings with the indigenous people of the land, tracing the significance of the Aboriginal presence in three texts selected from the oeuvre of Patrick White: Voss (1957), Riders in the Chariot (1961), and A Fringe of Leaves (1976). Each of these texts interrogates European culture ' s denigration of the non-European Other as embedded in the discourse of orientalism. One central merit of White ' s commanding perspective is the constant close attention he pays to European hubris and to the paramount autonomy of indigenous culture. There is evidence even of a project which can be articulated as a search for the possibility of white indigeneity, the potential for the white settler ' s belonging within the land as does the indigene.
