After tragic turns in their lives, two boys find themselves at one of the last schools teaching the ancient craft of the ninja. As they endure the cut-throat training of Master Uncle, they struggle to make sense of what brought them to seek this new way of life in the first place. There is treachery, heartache, ultra-violence, and magical aspects that are totally not lame. Friends become enemies. Enemies become dead. Kids eat rats. Blades get thrust through faces. And a question lurks: Will the boys succumb to the evil ways of a dark master or follow the pure chaotic arts of Master Uncle who desperately tries to keep them on the right path? There's also some poetry at the end. And a fable somewhere in the middle. And there is a magnificent battle between young, clueless ninjas in a bordello. But most importantly, the book is filled with VIOLENT yet PHILOSOPHICAL iterations of KA-POW.
