as well as multinational. It is refreshingly free of cynicism or melancholy. Written in an interesting and interactive style, each poem has an icon or image attached to it (as a visual complement) and most of the texts carry explanatory notes for a better understanding of cross-cultural references, which is a unique feature of this volume. Readers will find it at once thoroughly enjoyable and thought-provoking, as attested by the following review comments from across the globe. • John Leong on Butterfly Effect: “ ... that gave me a brief history lesson on India; never thought about it in that context too; really eye-opening...! ” • Freddie Robinson Jr. on No free lunch: “ Very enlightening views... Powerfully expressed ..I admire and respect your intellectual honesty and bravery. I am blessed to have read your words of wisdom... ” • Silent One on Identity and Difference: “ Great storytelling. ” • Maureen McGreavy on Catch-22: "OH sharp pen! Enthralling read!"

Thoughtful poetic insights into the life of a sensitive child, woman and mother. The prose shares memories of her sometimes difficult childhood and the emotional issues she grappled with in adulthood as a result. The words celebrate her recovery and convey the inspiration she gained through her journey to health where, with renewed spirit, she connects with the world and the joy it offers. Her love for her two sons, her friends and Mother Nature are clear, as her words get to the heart of what really matters in life. A Silver Lining reflects the good that came from the bad. And when the storm died, I wandered again, Towards home this time, to my safety den, It's beautiful out there, the nature around, The storms and the sunshine, the mountains and ground. the thinning lines between responsibility and complicity, the tangled “ supply chain ” that unnervingly connects the domestic to the political, personal memory to social practice, and age-old familial discords to our new place in the anthropocentric world. Equal parts celebration and lament for the mechanisms we shape and are shaped by, these poetic acts reveal the poet as an entangled mediator among registers of public and private, intimate and historical, voicings. Here we traffic in the blessings and burdens of the human will to shape a world. What ’ s more, as we follow these linked enchainings of the deeply en-worlded citizen, we reawaken to the central paradox of our time, the need to refuse easy answers, to stay open, trilling, between these necessary notes of critique and of compassion.
